WASHINGTON LETTER.

[From our Regular Correspondent.] WASHINGTON, October 17.

Mr. Blaine's arrival at his Washington residence this week, just after making a speech in New York and otherwise exhibiting his interest in the campaign, is a political event of the first magnitude, for, say what they will, he wields a greater influence in the Republican party than any one man in its ranks. If proof were needed that this statement is correct it may be found in the increased political activity both in New York and in Washington which he has directly brought about. The Democrats are now fully satisfied that Mr. Blaine honestly and sincerely desires the election of Harrison and Reid, and that so far as the state of his health will permit he is working to bring about that result.

The campaign has passed the bragging stage, and it now appears to be generally conceded that New York will again decide the election of a President, and it is also conceded, privately if not publicly, by those best informed, that the fight in New York is far from being decided in either party's favor; that it is yet to be won and lost, and that victory depends largely upon the generalship displayed by the respective party managers during the next three weeks. Not a few people believe that it is to be after all a question of dollars and the purchase of the "floating" vote of the State.

The American delegates to the International Monetary Conference which is to meet at Brussels Nov. 22 are to meet here on Nov. 10, for the purpose of consulting with the President, the Secretary of State, and the Secretary of the Treasury concerning their powers and duties. They expect to sail from New York on the 12th.

Of course there will always be more or less talk during a Presidential campaign about what is being done in the big Government departments at Washington to aid the party in power, and in many campaigns there has, to your correspondent's own personal knowledge, been ample foundation for all the talk. But this year the Government employees, aside from a few of the more prominent ones, men who can make good stump speeches and who are for one or another reason ambitious of making themselves The conspicuous in the fight, are not "in it"

The campaign collector, once a mucl dreaded individual to Government clerks, is now openly laughed at by those who goods for our customers. do not care to contribute, and few of them do, let me tell you. It is certain that less money has been raised for political purposes this year in Washington than was ever raised before in a Presidential year. The Civil-Service Commission claims the credit for this reform, and as it gets so little credit for anything else it may be just as well to let it go at that, although it would be easy to show that other reasons have also been instrumental in bringing about the

The Postmaster-General has signed the contract for the carrying of the mail from this country to Europe in vessels flying the American flag and owned by the International Navigation Company (formerly known as the Inman Line), but it will be about three years before the company can get its five new vessels of the same class as the City of Paris and the City of New York, which were admitted to American registry by Congress at its last session, ready for service. Those two vessels will carry the European mail on all their outward trips from New York until the new vessels are completed; when there will be a regular semi-weekly service.

Notwithstanding their defeat in other States, the People's Party men at the Alliance headquarters here appear to be confident of carrying North Carolina and Alabama, and of largely increasing their membership in Congress.

Mrs. Harrison's condition is the one topic that is exciting much more interes in Washington than the campaign, and yet there is nothing to say about it that has not been said. She still lives, but that is all; she is slowly dying as consumptives usually do. President Harrison devotes a small portion of his time to his public duties and to political conferences, but his heart never leaves that sick-room, and his friends fear that the unescapable result may prove disastrous to his own health.

This Government has formally recognized the Government of Crespo, the new provisional President of Venezuela. If the recent increase in import duties is maintained during the remainder of the fiscal year there will be an unexpectedly large surplus in the United States Treasury on the first of next

Eating for Strength. "Food that 'tastes good' is digested more readily and assimilated more perfectly, so that we really derive more nourishment from it." So says the Boston Cook Book, and the sentiment is so sound and the language so well chosen that we really think it must have been written under the inspiration of a "Ham Omelet" made with a Ferris Famous Ham.
